Medical Release

Due to the high altitude of Bolivia, acclimation is required, for the body and brain don't work properly in an environment with only half the oxygen content of sea level. In addition to the decrease of oxygen, you can expect and increase in the intensity of ultraviolet light from the Sun. Be prepared to use sunscreen and Chapstick to prevent dried and sunburned lips. We cannot stress the importance of taking precautions against high altitude hypoxia. Marked differences in tolerance to hypoxia exist and physical activity should be limited for at least the first 48 hours. Symptoms of hypoxia include dizziness, headache, lethargy, drowsiness, chilliness, nausea and vomiting. Preventative measures include adequate rest and sleep the day before travel, reduced food intake, elimination of alcohol, tobacco and unnecessary physical activity during travel. In addition, you should consult your physician about preventative medication for hypoxia. You should also inquire about having a current physical. Patients with sickle cell disease, history of heart or lung disease should avoid altitudes higher than 9,000 feet above sea level.

This signed release will be required to participate on this trip to 12,300 feet of altitude and should indicate your current physical condition. We want to take every precaution to prevent any of our group from getting ill from high altitude sickness and will have oxygen available. By taking the necessary precautions, you will have a most enjoyable trip!

I acknowledge the information given in regards to altitude sickness and the preventative measures that can be taken. I have consulted with my local physician and hereby declare myself in good physical condition to participate in the Southern Skies Star Party 2008.
